Women In the Legal Profession

The number of women who take up the law as a profession is steadily on the in-crease. Miss Leila J. Robinson, one of the women who secured admission after a long struggle, wrote for The Green Bag some time ago an article in which the histories of many of the women lawyers were related. Mrs. Bella A. Mansfield of Mount Pleasant, Ia., was the first woman to be admitted to the practice of the law. She passed the necessary examination in June, 1889. The second woman who became a lawyer in this country, so far as is known, was Miss Lamma Barkalow of Brooklyn, who was admitted to the bar in Missouri in March, 1870. The third to gain the de sired privilege was Miss Sarah Kilgore, who was graduated from the law school of the Michigan university in March, 1871. Some of the women in the various states of the Union who have become members of the bar use their legal knowledge only in earing for their own property. Others are engaged exclusively in office work, but several appear in court and transact all the usual business of active practitioners. There are several firms in the west in which the husband and wife are the part-ners in carrying on the occupation of at-torneys and counselors. In one case the husband is entirely deaf, and the wife consequently has the larger share in carrying on active litigation. The legal profession has not yet become so popular among women, however, as that of medicine.

A Gigantic Tun.

The Heidelberg tun is completely thrown into the shade and is, in fact, nothing better than a keg as compared with the mon-ster that has just been turned out at the Paris "Halle aux Vins," the largest em-porium of the juice of the grape in the universe. This huge cask has a capacity of 18,710 gallons and measures 23 feet in height. The staves, each made in one piece, are bound together by 16 iron hoeps. But the chief peculiarity of this masterpiece of cooperage consists in its internal arrangement. The tun of the Paris wine vaults is divided into five sections of une-qual size, hermetically closed to one an-other, which enable it to be filled with five different descriptions of wine without the slightest intermixture taking place. The filling is effected by means of an atmospherical pump constructed on a new prin-ciple, which sucks up the wine through enormous hose pipes and conveys it to its proper campartment. A lift gives access to the small doors, or manholes, in the sides of the vat, through which the workn are admitted for the purpose of cle ing it out. When empty, the cask weighs about 11 tons, and 96 tons after it is filled. -Illustrirtes Wiener Extrablatt.

House—Two revenue measures passed: Hard's bill increasing the tax on collateral inheritances from 3½ per cent to 5 and the Dodge bill to impose direct inheritance tax. Glark's bill to amend the mechanics' lein law passed. Mr. Doty, chairman of finance committee, introduced a bill to authorias sinking fund commissioners to issue $600.000 in certificates of indebtodness for general revenue fund, the same to be paid in 1856 with 5 per cent interest annually.

SENATE—The house deficiency bill passed. Bills introduced: Increasing the penalties for violation of the paternity laws; limiting the height of freightears to 14 feet; requiring druggists to pay the Dow tax. Bills passed: House bills making copies of official documents of the federal government, properly certified, competent evidence in the state court; requiring the use of the dry measures in selling small fruits. Senate bills passed: Exempting from responsibility for loss custodians of public money and private baquests who deposit such moneys in authorized banks; allowing justices $i$ for all cases tried before them; providing that in the smaller cities the boards of elections need not advertise for bids for printing official ballots.

Friday.

SENATE—The session was very short, and but one bill—a local one—was passed. Several were introduced.

House—Eight bills were passed and 90 introduced. Among the latter were: Griffin's to tax sleepingcars; a national guard officer may, after 10 years of service, be placed on the retired list as his own request; school examiners may teach in normal schools or teachers' institutes: sheriffs shall begin their terms on the lat of August instead of the 1st of January after their election. The Burns law was so amended in the house as to allow certain improvements, even if the money is not in the fund.

Babies and the Spring. Springtime is always charming, baby-hood in whatever form you meet it appeals to the senses in an irresistible fashion not to be set aside, and whatever good there is in one develops beautifully under the gen-tle warmth of an April sun or an infant's Iditis lembs, kittens, pupples, baby biados of gmss, little curly catkins, are all part and parcel of that beautiful season in life and nature the we never fully appreciated until it is flown. How many mothers have sain, "If I could keep my baby a baby always!" The clinging dependence of that springtime is dispelled little by little as summer comes on, and when autumn, with its sturdy, glorious when autumn, with its sturdy, glerious beauty, has finally displaced the summer time of youth the mother realizes that her little one is a child no mora, that there are other interests for it outside of "mother," and the great love of her heart longs again for the springtime, when the tender plant was too young to rely upon itself for Cherish the babies. Keep them young as long as possible; revel in the spring sun-shine, neither dreading the future nor thinking of the past; just be content with life as it is today, thankful for bright days and storing up for yourself a fund of strength and honest courage to meet the storms when they eventually come into your life.—St. Louis Republic.

A Monkey's Strategy.

"While traveling through Europe several years ago," said Benjamin F. Sutton of Troy, N. Y., "I came across a man who was exhibiting a performing monkey. The beast was as dexterous a thief as could be imagined, and his master told me that every day he stole enough food for his subsist-ence. He told me to watch him for a few ence. He told me to watch him for a few minutes. I did so, and presently his keep-er led him to a spot clees to where a date seller was sitting on the ground with his basket beside him. Here his master put him through a number of tricks, and al-though I could see the monkey was cying the fruit he did not make any demonstra-tion toward taking it. In the related of the fruit he did not make any demonstra-tion toward taking it. In the midst of one of his feats he suddenly started up from the ground, and uttering a cry of pain or rage fixed his eyes full on the face of the date seller. Then, without moving the rest, of his body he stole as many dates as he could hold in one of his 'hind hands.' The date seller, being thus stared out of counce and having his attention diverted by this extraordinary movement, knew nothing of the theft until told of it by a bystander."-St. Louis Globe-Democ

Is This Fair?

Men manage the schools very absurdly in some respects. For instance, when teachers give scholars their monthly re-ports they are directed by board rules to say, "Have your father sign this, if he is living; otherwise your mother." How ridiculous that is when the mothers know ten times as much about what their chilten times as much about what their children are doing in school as the fathers!
But the rule is natural enough. The father is the owner of the child. Yes, that is true. Legally, the father of any child can give it away or apprentice it or offer it for adoption without the mother's consent or even her knowledge. The Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Children would probably prevent such a thing, but the law is wrong just the same. The moththe law is wrong just the same. The mother knows most about her children, does most for them, is best acquainted with them, but her legal rights are less than his. Is that fair?—New York Recorder.

The Pest of Flies.

The bee is but one of several plagues that have to be set off per contra in the ledger of Terni joys. The fly is another— that common nuisance which infests the Teral country as an entomological anomaly-that is, a house fly where houses

Wherever in those regions the camp of man is pitched, there do these dipterous insects—these minimized harples—swarm. At night they are only moderately active, but when the day has warmed a little tive, but when the day has warmed a little they fill the air with their discordant burs-ing, and every teacup, milk jug or other possible receptacle with their bodies. The only way of eating a breakfast in their company is to take that meal in an inclo-sure of mosquito netting, and even then hundreds of them contrive to effect an entrance, and being inside dispute each mouthful between the plate or cup and lip.

Then there are sand files, whose dimensions are such as preclude seclusion by any material that will admit the air and whose stings are as aggravating as those of mosquitoes. And finally there is an insect that, as an amateur entomologist, I call the eye fly—an insect that attacks one dur-ing the heat of the day, and particularly when one is open eyed for tiger, with the set purpose of getting into one's eye.

That villainous insect does not sting. It is satisfied with committing suicide, when the consequence is inflammation to the eye that crushes out its useless life, and it persists, in spite of frequent repulse, in finding a grave there. It is a nuisance when it dodges about within a foot of one's face, aiming now at one eye, now at the other. It is painfully so when it perishes triumphant.—Blackwood's Magazine.
